A modern singer/songwriter who makes tradition come alive.

TRADITIONAL & ORIGINAL BLUES, COUNTRY & FOLK

Jon Lawton has spent decades writing, recording, and touring blues, country, and folk, rotating through National Steel, six- and twelve-string guitars, and banjo depending on what a song calls for. He started on classical piano at eight, picked up guitar in the eighth grade, and found his way to the blues shuffle as a teenager after a cousin brought him to see the Rolling Stones and the Grateful Dead live in Los Angeles — and never really stopped chasing it since.

His influences run from Big Bill Broonzy, Brownie McGhee, and John Lee Hooker through Hank Snow, Pete Seeger, and Merle Haggard — blues, country, and folk treated like they were never really separate traditions to begin with. Onstage that shows up as old-style guitar and banjo technique, a plainly conversational vocal style, and the ability to move seamlessly from rags and stomps into his own quieter, observational tunes.

*“I don’t usually watch the opening act...
He killed!”*

JOHN HAMMOND

“An original voice, an Americana artist with a bottomless reservoir of freshness and imagination.”

Midnight with the Light On

Two sessions make up the record — one side leans country, the other brings in horns, background singers, and a killer rhythm section. It's the clearest picture yet of everywhere Jon's music has been.

"I'm proud to have worked with Jon on Midnight with the Light On."

DOUG JAMES — ROOMFUL OF BLUES, JIMMIE VAUGHAN

"Lawton is a capable vocalist who really knows how to put across lyrics."
